

Haryana chief minister Manohar Lal Khattar told the foreign cooperation branch of the department to look at potato processing and cold storage technology in the state. Dutch investments in Haryanas in the fields of horticulture, agriculture, and floriculture were also discussed.

CHANDIGARH (Reuters) – Haryana's chief minister, Manohar Lal Khattar, told the foreign cooperation branch of the department on Tuesday to look at potato processing and cold storage technology in Haryana in partnership with Dutch companies. Vikas Chaturvedi from Valuecent, The Netherlands, and Bhavana Vishwanath from Kiremko BV are among a delegation from the Netherlands. Shilpa Mittal from Women on Wings, Gowhar Shah from Ridder Netherland, Puneet Raman from PUM Netherlands, and. In a meeting held here by the foreign cooperation department, Rajesh Chauhan of Schouten Europe met with the chief minister.

Khattar directed the foreign cooperation department to facilitate field visits for Dutch investors to the locations that have been uncovered to build up potato processing units and cold storage plants in the state. The CM said that emphasis should be given to increasing female involvement through the use of the Centre of Excellence and the women entrepreneur facilitation program to connect with the global supply chain in FPOs, according to the CM. In addition, Dutch investments in Haryana in the fields of horticulture, agriculture, and floriculture were also discussed. The CM said that it is extremely important to understand next-generation technology so that Haryana can exploit the latest technologies to increase productivity and income of the farmers.